There was none to protest. Austria, saved from the grip of the Turk, and Europe spared from the dominion of a Turkish empire, submitted-Austria, because her king was a weakling, and France, because the king feared the combined power of the rapists.

Maria Theresa, Joseph's queen, cried bitter tears over the spoilation of this brave people's land, but a woman's tears, where Fredrick and Catherine were concerned, counted for nothing. "For a wretched piece of land," quote the Austrian queen, as bitterly yielded to the majority, "we give up honor and fair fame."

And Germany and Austria cannot wipe out that dishonor merely by restoring to the Poles a third of that which rightfully belongs to them. A congress of nations, following the war, might do that, but neither Austria, nor Germany nor Russian can blot out the infamy merely by establishing a mock kingdom at the expense of an enemy.

HARD TO ANALYZE

Chas. E. Hughes probably is elected president of the United_ States. Early returns give him a safe lead, but in many of the states the vote is so does that it will require the most of the day to clear the result.

Assuming that Mr. Wilson is defeated, it will be a pretty hard job showing the causes. Of course we know that millions of dollars were spent in the close states and that the greatest campaign of newspaper and magazine advertising ever known was conducted the last few days before the election.

We may be positive that the Atlantic seaboard states, in casting their electoral votes against the president, did so largely because of disapproval of the president's foreign policy. New York newspapers which supported Wilson asserted that many Democrats, disappointed because the president had not been firmer in his foreign policy, would vote for Hughes as a protest. But why should the people in the middle west be different?

That it was a close race there is not the slightest doubt. This shows the undoubted popularity of the president, who, in the face of the biggest leaders in the Republican party and a great campaign in the doubtful states, backed by loads of money, kept the country guessing for more than 12 hours after the polls closed.

As much as Austria has been abused, it is only fair to say that under her administration the Poles have been happier than under the rule of Germany and Russia. For one thing, the Austrians allowed the Poles to foster their genius for music and in many ways allowed the unhappy pecple liberties that were denied them by the other powers.
